18TH ANNUAL AMERICAN INDIAN STUDIES ASSOCIATION CONFERENCE

Thursday February 2 & Friday February 3, 2017

Student Union Building (SUB)
University of New Mexico

The American Indian Studies Association (AISA) & the Institute for American Indian Research (IFAIR)
Welcome You
On behalf of the Institute for American Indian Research (IFAIR) and the University of New Mexico (UNM), welcome to the 18th Annual American Indian Studies Association (AISA) Conference. Welcome to the AISA council and Arizona State University’s American Indian Studies, with whom we collaborate to make the 18th AISA conference happen. AISA has a history of commitment to the flourishing of Native American/Indigenous Studies and we come together once again to share our scholarship. This year’s theme, Indigenous Activism and Healing, speaks to Native/Indigenous events and actions that are currently part of the North American political and cultural landscape. In the current political moment, we are witness once again for the imperative to resist and challenge the always present efforts to undermine and disenfranchise Indigenous nations, citizens and peoples from our rightful claims to land, territories, sovereignty and self-determination. This year’s conference theme speaks to Indigenous struggle against colonialism through activism and to seek renewal and inspiration through the remembrance of our ancestors’ determination to remain distinctively Indigenous within specific indigenous ways of being. IFAIR, Native American Studies (NAS), and American Indian Student Services (AISS) are pleased to host this conference, to be part of the conduit to share and pass on Indigenous knowledge, ways of being, and to celebrate activism as part of our collective history.

IFAIR, NAS, and AISS are but three UNM institutions devoted to Native/Indigenous Studies and promoting our Native communities. We privilege the connections between theory, praxis and the needs of our respective Native nations and citizens. Here at UNM, we engage in decolonization and join in national and international debates on the meaning of decolonization and resurgence for Indigenous nations, our communities and peoples. We welcome collaboration across departments and programs to promote interdisciplinary Native/Indigenous scholarship and have seen our faculty and students thrive. We extend appreciation to Dean Mark Peceny and the College of Arts and Sciences for IFAIR support. IFAIR also enjoys the support of NAS and American Studies, among other departments and programs. In particular, we are grateful for Dr. Lloyd L. Lee’s leadership of IFAIR for five years. We also express our appreciation to NAS director Gregory Cajete for his support and NAS administrator Delia Halona for supporting our programs, faculty, and students. We are also grateful for the support of AISS, under the leadership of director Pamela Agoyo. Over the years, affiliate faculty who have supported IFAIR and interdisciplinary Indigenous scholarship at UNM include Lloyd L. Lee, Gregory Cajete, Tiffany Lee, Robin Minthorn, Beverly Singer, Mary Alice Tsosie, Kathleen Washburn, Cathleen Cahill, Kevin Brown, Kamilla Venner, Steve Verney, Kimberly Huyser, Sherri Thomas, Mary Ann Willie, Luci Taphahtonso, among others. We look forward to more collaborations and sharing of our work in Native/Indigenous Studies and welcome AISA to continue the conversations and dialogues.

Finally, as a faculty member of American Studies here at UNM, I also extend a note of appreciation to my chair Alex Lubin and my colleagues and our students in American Studies for their warm reception of interdisciplinary Native/Indigenous Studies in American Studies. Thank you for joining us at the 18th Annual American Indian Studies Association conference and enjoy!
